

LITERARY NOTES.

In Thomas Hughes's forthcoming volume, "Gone to Texas," are presented letters written by three boys who are making their way to fortune in a new land. These letters, addressed to friends at home, describe the fashion in which they make their new home and the people they encounter; and give all manner of personal details as to wages and their methods of working.

Mr. Labouchere records his remembrances of a visit paid to Washington Irving, on which occasion the American said that he had acquired ease and elegance in writing by a careful study of Addison's essays. He used, he said, to read an "Essay," then write it out from memory, and compare his phrases with those of the original.

Mr. Henry James has written a short story which will present its analytic charms to the readers of the June number of The English Illustrated Magazine.

The American agent of the Macmillans will bring out immediately General Gordon's volume of "Reflections in Palestine."

According to Mr. Walter Besant's statistics, novels constitute nine-tenths of the books read in England and nineteen-twentieths of the books read in the world. In his recent lecture on the Art of Fiction Mr. Besant gave some interesting hints to the young writers who propose to contribute to this mass of imaginative reading. In the first place he entirely repudiated Mr. Howells's theory that all the dramatic stories have already been told, and that the chief business for the modern novelist is to depict and analyze human character.

Mr. Besant holds that the first duty of a novelist is to have a story to tell, and his second to tell it without trying to be too clever in his method of narration and without allowing himself to divert the attention of the reader by episodic matter, or to fatigued him by long descriptions, superfluous conversation, or unnecessary reflections. "Surprises" Mr. Besant insists upon as essential to the interest of a story; and he lays special stress on the necessity of the novelist confining himself to what he knows from his own personal experience. This injunction would seem to shut out imagination, and tend to carry the writer in the direction of Mr. Howells's theory.

President Eliot of Harvard, has prepared for the June Century a paper on the subject, "What is a Liberal Education?"

PORTRAITS OF EMINENT NEW-YORKEERS.

STEPHEN A. COOPER, 50 cents.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.—These portraits have been written off-hand, and might have been extremely hasty if set down in a moment. They are intended for the benefit of professional men—doctors, lawyers, general journalists, financiers and actors. I can scarcely hope to please everyone; and I am willing to sacrifice a certain degree of accuracy to the convenience of my portraits that is all I can desire. As to the expressions of opinion upon various topics, political, social, &c., these portraits are of no value. These portraits, these are, of course open to objection and argument. The only merit I claim for them is that they are sincere, and nobly and candidly drawn by hand.
